This invention relates to a resilient, shock-absorbing, self-hinged, pressure-sensitive adhesive tape dispenser which comprises a flexible backing of conventional adhesive pressure-sensitive tape, with an attached front support tab designed to be inserted into a rear slot of the backing and serve as a spring to urge a continuous length of tape away from the backing to a position near the front of the backing. The dispenser includes a cross-bar bridging the backing and tab to prevent tape payout from the backing and extending longitudinally of the backing to serve as a back support for the dispenser. The dispenser also includes a side support extending laterally of the backing and tab which serves to support the dispenser when positioned for use. Additionally, the dispenser includes a rear cover which is designed to be snapped into engagement with the dispenser to close the dispenser against accidental payout of the tape. Adhesive pressure-sensitive tape dispensers of the character described herein are well known in the art. These dispensers conventionally comprise a backing of pressure-sensitive tape with an attached front support tab which is designed to be snapped into a rear slot of the backing to urge a continuous length of tape away from the backing to a position near the front of the backing. The front support tab is commonly located near the dispenser's side so that the user may push a continuous length of tape from the dispenser when desired. Such dispensers also conventionally include a cross-bar or other means to prevent the tape from paying out from the dispenser so that a continuous length of tape can be pulled in a desired direction. Finally, these dispensers conventionally include a cover which may be snapped onto the dispenser to close the dispenser against accidental payout of the tape. In the past, resilient dispensers of the character described herein were commonly constructed of a backing of a conventional adhesive pressure-sensitive tape with an attached front support tab and a cross-bar. While such a dispenser has proven to be generally satisfactory for its intended purpose, it is also well known that such a dispenser suffers from one disadvantage in that the cross-bar, as well as the pressure-sensitive tape, must be protected from damage caused by being caught in the other components of the dispenser. While various means have been proposed
